A Pure Heart

James 3:17

Ethical decisions often leave us confused as we live in an age that is volatile, uncertain, complex, and morally ambiguous.

News outlets and social media present sharply differing “truths,” as endless debates rage between “personal rights”and what could simply be selfish expression. Meanwhile, the demand for “flexibility” at the workplace often runs counter to the inner call to stand firm on principle.

It is into this foggy scenario that the opening phrase “first of all, pure” in James 3:17 shines. Indeed, it is no accident for purity to head the list of wisdom’s seven qualities. After all, the height of a building depends not on the elegance of its decoration but on the firmness of its foundation.

“Purity” does not mean the pursuit of absolute flawlessness — something none but Jesus can attain. Rather, it is the transparency and integrity of the inner heart: genuine motives,crystal-clear agenda, and no display of hypocrisy. Like a clean window through which people see the scenery beyond rather than the glass itself, a pure life allows others to see Christ, not our own display of “spiritual devotion.”

Without purity, every virtue can become corrupted. Peace may degenerate into compromise, gentleness into weakness, mercy into a means of seeking reputation, and good deeds becomes a form of self-flaunting. Like a house built upon an unsuitable foundation, the problem will eventually be exposed, no matter how attractive the exterior may appear to be.

Amid complex moral dilemmas, a pure heart is like a magnet drawn toward Truth. As Jesus taught, “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God” (Matthew 5:8). Purity grants us spiritual insight, enabling us to discern God’s will — even in the midst of the foggiest weather.

Many ministries begin full of pomp and circumstance, only to end in a whimper — not because they lack gifts or resources but because the purity of heart is simply not there. Impure motives are like an army of termites, silently gnawing away the vitality of a ministry from within.

A pure heart requires deliberate practice:

1. Daily examination of motives

At the end of the day, spend five minutes of quiet time alone before God and reflect on three questions: What was the primary motive behind my most important decision today? Was there anything I hoped would be unseen within the range of actions I most wanted others to notice? Were my words meant to build others up, or to build my own image? If any impurity is revealed, bring it at once before God in confession and as for His forgiveness.

2. Set up a “purity partnership”

Find a trusted spiritual companion and keep watch over each other. Meet once a month and ask each other: What temptations have been challenging the purity of your heart of late? How can I pray for you so that you may be strengthened in your areas of weakness?

3. Choose the brightest option

Cultivate the habit of choosing the clearest path when you are faced with decisions on grey areas pertaining to morality issues. Among all permissible options, cultivate the habit of choosing the one that shines most brightly, least open to reproach, and honours God best. Instead of asking, “What’s wrong with this?” ask, “Which choice honours Christ the most?”

Jesus directly links purity of heart with seeing God in the Beatitudes. The greatest reward of a pure heart is neither a trouble-free life nor the respect of others, but the privilege of seeing God Himself. Even amid confusion we would possess the ability to hear His still and gentle Voice,clearer than ever— when the heart is pure.

Audience Feedback

Overcoming the Storm, Winning in the Workplace 01

The greater the pressure, the more anxious we become; the more anxious we become, the more difficult it is for us to hear the Lord's voice.

(David Chiang, 31 Jan 2026)

Workplace Communications Made Easy

1. This course has taught me about communication with employees; it requires not only sincerity and empathy, but also a caring and objective attitude. I also realized that communicating with supervisors not only calls for emotional quotient, but also treating them with sincerity of heart and mind, wisdom and courage to build up and sustain better communications.

(Mr. Wei)

2. This course broadened my perspective and helped me manage workplace relationships from various approaches.

(Ms. Fan)

3. I feel more confident in matters relating to communications within workplace relationships after this learning experience.

(Mr. Zhong)
