Shepherd's Corner

I know how to live on... (Philippians 4:12, NLT)

The unpredictability from the impact and changes wrought by the current pandemic puts the adaptability of every one under the spotlight. People everywhere are going through unprecedented changes, at the family level, in the workplace or within the entire society at large. The key issue faced by every individual, business and organization is how we are going to reinvent our steps going forwards. To do this, we need to sensitize ourselves to changes in the situation at hand, gain access and process the deluge of incoming information effectively so that we can arrive at a firm basis for us to make the wise decisions and move on to the implementation stage.

Adaptability is key to spreading the good news as well. It was this outstanding adaptability in apostle Paul that propelled him to remake himself each time a new environment or condition appeared on the horizon. As a result, he was able to soldier on for the Lord under ever-changing circumstances. He spread the gospel even as he went on with his tent-making occupation, and, as he put it, becoming all things to all men. He did not differentiate between the high official and the common man, handling them as a fish takes to water, fighting against the reactive forces aligned against him along the way.

Paul's secret weapon in adapting himself for the battle did not come from his ability to change these adverse circumstances, but in drawing strength from this: "I can do all this through him who gives me strength." (Philippians 4:13). Yes, he is pointing to Christ here! He focused the power of the gospel on Christ Himself and relied on Him to complete his mission. Indeed, by so doing, he has set a beautiful example for the church and ourselves to emulate.

Work with the environment in mind; respond as the opportunity beckons. Global Reachout is launching the new edition of "Go. Excellence" in its Wei Xin Public Account. We aspire to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves (Matthew 10:16) as we persevere in our efforts in spreading the Word, overcoming the tough times around us. Our new series "All Systems Go at the Workplace" focuses on the subject of human relationships within the workplace -- an all-time must-have weapon vital to both newbies and old hands alike. We encourage everybody to learn as one, forward and share these messages to reach out to one and all!
