The Word Made Flesh

John 1:14

In an earlier message, we spoke of becoming fishers of men without delay. Through the season of Christmas, God grants us a glimpse into a deeper mystery: the Word becoming flesh and dwelling among us. This is no distant theological assertion, but a living reality that may be personally encountered and truly experienced.

The most beautiful expression of the Word made flesh took place in the most ordinary of settings. Jesus did not choose to reveal Himself in a holy temple; instead, He was born in a humble manger, grew up in an ordinary household, and laboured in a humble carpenter’s shop. This suggests that true holiness is often concealed within the most ordinary rhythms of life.

Let the Word take flesh once more in the daily life in your home. A willing embrace, when husband and wife find themselves in conflict, often heals more than many words. When God’s children stumble, a smile of understanding can quietly reflect the Father’s steadfast love. Similarly, as our parents grow old, a patient and faithful presence becomes one of the most touching expressions of filial devotion.

Let the Word once again be made visible through your character in your workplace. Serve your colleagues with a servant’s heart, carry out your work with unwavering integrity, and hold yourself firmly to a standard of excellence. When we lay down our whole lives as an offering upon the Lord’s altar, the place where we stand turns into holy ground.

Grace and truth must shine together. Jesus was never sometimes full of grace and other times full of truth; rather, He was overflowing with both at all times. We are likewise called to this balance in our own lives: grace to soften hearts and bring warmth, and truth to show the path of righteousness.

In a life pressed by constant stress, learn first to show grace: a look of understanding, a word of encouragement, a sincere apology from the heart. In a generation where right and wrong are often blurred, act with the courage to uphold truth with integrity, teach uprightness, and live a life consecrated to holiness.

The miracle of the Word made flesh does not wait for some special occasion—it can unfold today, even this very moment: reach out with gratitude to your family, pray quietly and earnestly for your colleagues, and go the extra mile to aid those in need.

May this Christmas season be more than a remembrance of a newborn child. May it be a time for the risen Lord to continue His work through our lives—bringing the miracle of the Word made flesh into our homes, our workplaces, and into every corner of our daily living! May the miracle of the Word made flesh be born anew in our lives this very day!
